the contract for building the Pacific Railway. We need not enquire into the motives which J. led to this result ; we need not ask whether the recent disclosures spoiled the contractors' chances in England, or whether their failure to float the enterprise arose from some other cause. At present all we care to deal with is thick it opens for the future. It is plain that, in the actual circumstances, either the attempt to build the road must be abandoned, or its construction must be undertaken by the State. This is the alternative that presents itself for acceptance. For many reasons we cannot afford to abandon one of the greatest enterprises of our time, and one that affords the only means of consolidating the new nation. We are pledged, somewhat rashly, but still pledged, to the Pacific Province to build this road within a certain time ; we need railroad communication with Fort Garry and the water navigation of the Saskatchewan, by which together we can ascend to the Rocky Mountains; we must have such means of communication as will enable us to fif. up the country with a Canadian population, in order to stamp upon the whole Dominion the impress of a new nationality. But PUBLIC AUCTION does it follow that we must at once place the whole line of 2,500 miles under contract to a private company? We are not likely to find At Salesroom, Whart Street any company whose private resources would add snything substantial to the amount the nation might give in land and money : and any one company would be pretty sure to make demands for aid additional to its contract price, and to use great political pressure to enforce them. The amount which the Government agreed to pay the Allan A Straight Invoice Ex company might possibly prove to be sufficient to build the road. The cash payments were equal to $12,009 a mile, reckoning the length of the line at 2,500 miles, and the land grant to 20,000 acres a mile. Estimating the value of the land at $1 50 an acre, we have altogether $42,000 a mile subsidy ; an amount nearly equal to the average cost of

American railroads, and in excess of the cost of our Intercolonial. The experience of the latter work shows, in spite of all theories which profess to prove the contrary, that a government can build a railroad as cheaply as a private company, or the average of what to companies have paid. This expere will be of great use in the future. The ention of a private company would precisely what the Government would do-1st the work by contract. Where a private struct the road, and looks for a return in the earnings, its intervention is valuable; is everything. But where it finds only contractors' or mere working capital, where it finds none of the fixed capital, its aim will be to take some of it away is the shape of profits. Its intervention is then usaless, burdensome, wasteful, and wholly without justification. The true policy, then, is for the State to build the Pacific Railway, and we may congratulate ourfor the disgrace of the late disclosures, we Sussex, Maple, Ash and Whalebone are lucky to have escaped the dangers incident to a private company appearing as con- Cake Paint Boxes, Crying Babies, tractor for that work. We ought to save all Swing Oval Mirrors, Metal Slates, the profits which such a company would Folding Mirrors, make. But, in any case, the construction of Fishing Rods, assorted this road should be guided by some sort of Rosewood and Welnut Mouldings, asst. discretion. We are not bound to rush blindly into an enterprise, and to push it with a Rich Gilt Monldings asst. sizes. rapidity that would leave far behind every of railway through a wilderness years in adrance of its settlement. Without the railroad settlement can only proceed at a certain pace and reach a certain distance. What is CHIMNEY GLASSES-40x30 and MASTER J. W. MCREMELE, wanted, at first, on the Atlantic slope, is 35x25, railway communication with Fort Garry, This is obtainable in two ways; from Pembina, which will complete the American connection, and from Lake Superior, which will give us a road over our own territory.

The former is a trifling matter, whether we regard the cost or the time necessary for the construction. In time of peace it would reconstruction of all seasons. The afford communication at all seasons. The road from Lake Superior to Fort Garry, wholly within British territory, would probably be built for the amount which the be built for the amount which the British Government has undertaken to guar-antee; and considering the low rate at which that guarantee will enable us to borrow, the bends where a company could not. By keep in the lands itself, the State would reap all the profits in their final sale; and it could, if the profits in their sual sale; and it could, if there was any object in its make the lands the basis of the bends, by providing that their process could go to form a fund by which the bends would be paid off. In the could be the bends would cost less for the to balld the road than to confide its construction to a private company, and the weight of reason seems to us to be altogether in favor of that mode of proceeding.

Saskatcheran river, and to form settlements years to come. But we are under a time bargain with British Columbia. Let us do the bast we can, and, if necessary, appeal to the Pacific Province to extend the time. But we shall be bound, in good faith, to commence the railroad at the western end,
